

Overview:

There is an urgent need for enhanced infrastructure investment to bridge the infrastructure gap in the ASEAN region. The Master Plan for ASEAN Connectivity highlights the importance of an enhanced infrastructure base as a critical prerequisite to fostering economic and social development and regional connectivity. Public Private Partnerships (PPPs) play an important role in meeting the infrastructure challenge and have been an established part of many countries' development paths. Private participation in infrastructure provision can enhance existing public capacity in providing economic infrastructure (e.g. highways, transport, water, power telecommunication etc.) and social infrastructure (e.g. health and education). PPPs bring economic benefits through, for example, the transfer of technological expertise, managerial competence and product innovation. End-users can profit from a more competitive environment in the provision of public infrastructure and services, risks can be more efficiently allocated and the public authorities can achieve greater value for money.

Appreciating its advantage, ASEAN member states are turning to public private partnership (PPP) and public concession models to help build and finance infrastructure initiatives. PPPs will not only provide the much-needed capital, but also in instituting knowledge-sharing processes from the private sector to the communities and vice versa. Nevertheless, member states must first overcome the bottlenecks faced before reaping the full benefits of PPP.

The Public Private Partnership Unit, Prime Minister's Department, Malaysia (UKAS) is the central agency responsible for planning, facilitating and coordinating PPP projects in Malaysia. UKAS was established on 22 April 2009 to address the increasing need for a closer PPP collaboration in developing the economy. Malaysia has more than thirty (30) years of experience in PPP and had implemented more than 600 PPP projects involving total capital expenditure of RM182 billion (USD57 billion).

Malaysia's commendable experience in PPP has attracted interests from other developing countries. This is evident from the continued requests received by UKAS from foreign governments and international organizations for briefings, study visits and consultations based on Malaysia's PPP experience. To date, UKAS has held such forums with many countries including Uganda, Tanzania, India, Mongolia, Singapore, Nigeria, Sri Lanka and other international organizations including UNACEP, APEC, IDB, ADB and JICA.

About Malaysian Technical Cooperation Programme (MTCP)

The Malaysian Technical Cooperation Programme (MTCP) was first initiated at the First Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) for Asia Pacific Region in Sydney in February 1978. It was officially launched on 7 September 1980 at the Commonwealth Heads of State Meeting in New Delhi to signify Malaysia's commitment to South-South Cooperation, in particular Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries (TCDC). In line with the spirit of South-South Cooperation, Malaysia through the MTCP shares its development experiences and expertise with other developing countries. The MTCP was first formulated based on the belief that the development of a country depends on the quality of its human resources. Since its inception, more than 30,686 participants have undergone various training. MTCP has extended its recipient of countries to 142 developing nations for training within its ten (10) key areas.
